Forgotten Books, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Remedy for Unemployment An equally non-Socialist view was put forth by one of the most respected Socialists in Parliament when he advocated the immediate construction of light railways all over the country in order that when labour was brought back to the land the products could be carried economically to market, implying that the products were to be sold, thus competing in the market with those of other producers, lowering prices, and altogether ignoring the great Socialist principle of production for use. In the discussion of this question it has been totally overlooked that by a proper organisation of the labour of the permanently or temporarily unemployed, as well as of all those whose employment does not supply them with the means of a thoroughly sufficient and healthy existence, all the necessaries and comforts of life can be produced in our own country, just as they were produced down to a few centuries ago. I will now proceed to the exposition of the whole subject. In order that those who have not read the Labour Party s Unemployed Workmen Bill may understand why it could not have succeeded, a short statement of its essential provisions may here be given. The first clause provides that the Local Unemployment Authority under this Bill shall be the council of every borough or district of over 20,000 inhabitants, and for the rest of the county the County Council. Clause 3 declares that it shall be the duty of the Local Unemployment Authority to provide work for him (any workman registered as unemployed) in connection with one or other of the schemes hereinafter provided, or otherwise, or failing the provision of work, to provide maintenance,...
